Upcoming Programs

March 8 - John Clark

Chief Scientist - Office of Aviation Safety, NTSB

“Investigating Aviation Accidents - A Direct Impact On Wichita”

The National Transportation Safety Board is one of the smallest federal agencies but has a worldwide reach in promoting aviation safety. They have a special mandate from Congress and leverage the work of a very small group of investigators to accomplish major and regional aviation accident investigations. The presentation will include a brief insight into how the Safety Board works and discussions of some recent accidents. Mr. Clark also intends to discuss the few number of investigators they have and how they use other parties (such as Boeing, Cessna and Raytheon) to investigate.

John Clark has been employed at the National Transportation Safety Board since 1981 and serves as the Chief Scientist in the Office of Aviation Safety. He has also served as the Director of the Office of Aviation Safety, Deputy Director of the Office of Research and Engineering and was a National Resource Specialist specializing in airplane performance. While at the Board, Mr. Clark has participated in most major aviation accident investigations, starting with the 1982 Air Florida accident. Mr. Clark has twice received the Chairman's Award, the Board's highest distinction. Before joining the Board, Mr. Clark was employed for 2 years at Flight Safety International, where he designed simulators, and for 13 years at Beech Aircraft Corporation, where he designed missiles and investigated accidents. Mr. Clark has a Bachelor of Science degree in aeronautical engineering from Wichita State University, graduated from Wichita High School North and holds a private pilot certificate with a glider and instrument rating.

A native of Wichita, Kansas, Mr. Clark is married and has four children.
